Home offices you will love to work in

Working from home has become the norm for 40% of kiwis - how many of us enjoy the luxury of a home office that we felt good in? Now is the time to revamp your work from home set up to create a home office space that works for you.

It begins with a good chair... or lack thereof?

If you spend 40 hours a week in your office a good chair is key! A good chair should look good and compliment your work space.

Arguably more important than looking good is that it feels good - a chair that is comfortable and ergonomic will leave you feeling good at the end of the work day and save your posture for years to come. Do your research and take some for a test drive to see what works for you, there are a plethora of styles to suit all different needs.

In response to studies showing that sitting all day can be bad for your health the standing desk has risen in popularity. Experts recommend splitting your time between sitting and standing so having a desk that is adjustable is your best bet.

Express your personal style!

Your home office is yours! Take this opportunity to really express your personal style. Here are some tips to get you started.

- Use paint or wall paper to add colour and pattern
- Furnish the space with pieces you love
- Hang art that inspires you or pictures that remind you of what drives you

- Add your personality with things that bring you joy. This could be pot plants, could be a treadmill desk, could be an espresso machine, could be your prized signed All Blacks jersey - whatever brings you joy!

Maximize horizontal and vertical storage

Home office spaces aren't generally rich in square footage, and this is why you need to use the area efficiently. Floating shelves can be added to the walls to get office equipment and papers off the desk. Designate one of your desk drawers as 'to-do' and keep all your pending assignments there. You can also try cube storage to hold books or knick-knacks.

Create separation where you can

One of the best things you can do to create a healthy balance between your home office and your home is to separate the spaces as much as your home allows. For some folks you may mean a small separate structure on your property, for some it will be a dedicated or dual purpose room in your house and for some separation may be as simple as sitting on the opposite side of the dining table for work vs dining. Whatever you can do to maintain as much of your home as a non work area is best.

If your future holds more work from home you may consider renovating to create a space that better serves you and provides separation from your living space - check out these ideas of how to renovate your home to better accommodate a home office.

Use smart furniture to create multi-use spaces

Consider a Murphy bed or similar smart furniture that allows a home office to transform into a guest bedroom with just the pull of a lever.

Convert your attic space

If your attic space has ample head room converting it into an office space might be a great solution for you.

Convert your basement or garage

Similar to attic conversions, basement or garage conversions utilise space you already have that is not being used to its full potential. Converting a space you already have is a cost effective way to renovate a create new usable spaces without having to extend your home.

Create a small standalone office

No space in your house but plenty of yard? A small separate building tailored to your needs may be the answer. Small buildings can be a stylish and a relatively cost effective way to gain new space without extending on your home which is often costly and disruptive. —Provided by Pzazz Building

Thinking about your kitchen layout

Make your space work for you today, tomorrow and in the future

Kitchen planning should start with you and your family, and how you want to use your kitchen. This has a big impact on some of the planning decisions you'll make.

Things like whether you need to include a dining area for entertaining or a space that can double up as a home office or study? Is your kitchen open plan to other areas of the house? What will the view from other rooms look like? Do you need lots of worktop space for all your gadgets and utensils or do you prefer to have them all hidden away?

It's a good idea to start by writing these points down to talk through with your kitchen designer so they can plan YOUR perfect kitchen.

Do a lot of entertaining?

Is a seating area an essential requirement in your kitchen? Do you want to be able to quickly hide away mess made from cooking so you can focus on entertaining? What about lighting? You'll want to be able to switch between task lighting for food prep to mood lighting for during and after dinner.

Love your technology?

Do you like to have the TV on or perhaps even chat on FaceTime while you cook? Do you like to always have your technology on hand? From bluetooth speakers to built-in chargers, there are lots of clever ways you can seamlessly integrate your gadgets into the kitchen.

Will your kitchen also act as a mini office?

Do you want to be able to sit in your kitchen and work on your laptop, read documents or do household administration? How could this work in your ideal kitchen layout?

The future

Think about how much you use your kitchen now, and how would you like to use your new one. How might your needs change over time? Think about how you or members of your household might need to use the kitchen in 5-10 years time - will you have young children around? Or will your children have become teenagers with lots of friends around - all with smart phones and tablets to charge?

Are you always on the go?

Should your kitchen be designed for minimum hassle? What daily tasks will you do - make tea, load and unload the dishwasher, find things in your cupboards? Keep this in mind when you're planning your layout to make these functions simple and efficient.

Are you a serious cook?

If yes - then you'll need to make sure you allow plenty of space for all your favourite appliances, utensils and ingredients. You'll need lots of storage and lots of clear worktop space for preparation.

Our variable weather throughout all the seasons means a level of awareness about the benefits of double glazing does exist.

However, what does surprise people is the range of double glazing solutions available that can be applied to existing homes to address all sorts of issues.

A common perception people have is that the only benefit double glazing brings is a warmer, drier home. While this is a major benefit, it isn't the only one. Double glazing can also have the opposite effect, and create a cooler environment in the summer months.

Beyond climate control, double glazing solutions exist that are designed to reduce condensation, reduce noise, increase privacy and security, and can also be designed to minimise the damage to furniture or furnishing from the sun. Plus, to top it all off, double glazing usually results in a smaller power bill each month.

Modern double glazing solutions for existing homes can cater for both aluminium and timber joinery, and can involve both retrofitting double glazing or installing replacement joinery options.
